Writing

When it comes to the field of movies, I can confidently call myself a non-expert in this sort of thing. Because I am not a big enjoyer of films, however, the animated kind of movies has always been an ambitious place of comfort, that I find myself always returning to. A fine example of such animated movie is "Spirited away". The story of this movie follows a young girl named Chihira, who seems to be unpleasant with the idea of changing houses and moving out of her home-town. In the beginning, we are shown how self-centered the girl is, because she isn't able to stop thinking of the change. Together with her parents, Chihira discovers a tunnels and after many beggings, enters it. After discovering that on the other side of the tunnel, there is a spirit world that we people aren't welcome to, Chihira finds a friend named Hara. Hara is a patient young man that he helps Chihira find a way to free her parents and, throughout the story, finds his name and his spirit.

This movie is very dream-like, because when the viewer starts watching it, he ~~it~~ feels like a place full of wonder. Chihira is shown as a protagonist of the story, who shows how to fight for what you love through your fear. In compare to others, she shows the most of what it is like to <sup>show</sup> be compassionate to those around you. Overall, the movie is special to me because of its atmosphere and characters that make their world brighter.
